

Former aerospace mom finds CanScribe's Medical Transcription Program a perfect fit

LAKE COUNTRY, B.C. (February 5, 2010) - Charlene Gallant of PEI had worked in the aerospace industry and was also a weekend fitness instructor until she was stricken by a disabling illness in 2004. Her self-discipline and motivation had meant long hours of overtime and pushing herself to extremes. Devastated that she was unable to continue in this career, she looked at Medical Transcription as an alternative after it was mentioned to her by her daughter. It seemed to hold the benefits that she was looking for; was enjoyable and had the option of self employment, with flexible work hours.

Charlene says now, "I know my life is not hopeless. I am confident that I am working towards a worthwhile cause and this is of utmost importance to me in my life". She found CanScribe Career Centre's Medical Transcription program was a perfect fit as it would allow her the flexibility of being able to pick and choose her own hours of work at home - tailored around her disability. Charlene understood that this career choice meant being able to take on global customers with endless options and signed up for this program in late 2007. After graduating with Honours, she started her own business, "CG Transcription" in 2009. She says, "being an independent contractor will allow me the flexibility to be able to operate a home-based business in my community...my only constraints are deciding what market I want to aim for - whether it will be medical office, hospitals, or private clinics."

Colleen Gaudet, President & CEO of CanScribe Career Centre states that "Medical Transcription offers great work-from-home opportunities. Approximately 75% of our graduates choose to work from home after completing the course which allows them to fit their work schedule into their life schedule, instead of the other way around."
